Teamwork can be used to effectively and significantly impact school change. Matter of fact, it is next to impossible to generate positive results when addressing school change without the concerted efforts of teams ... but what happens if teams get stuck? Many times differences in passions and personalities among team members can stop change in its tracks, and hard-working individuals are unable to bring about the changes they seek. The challenge of leadership when trying to facilitate successful teaming is working with the conflicts that often arise in a group. During this session, tips for building successful teams will be shared, and participants will begin to create a toolbox of activities for the development of effective team management, problem solving and action planning. Activities will include specific objectives and format for addressing different types of team issues.
