

Richard Goldhammer Ed.M.

Educational Consultant & Learning Specialist | Lexington, MA

Richard Goldhammer is an educational consultant and learning specialist. Richard works with students to become skilled and engaged learners to achieve their educational goals. In addition to teaching duties in a private practice, Richard serves students in a similar capacity at Harvard Medical School. Prior to HMS, Richard served for 10 years as the learning specialist at Tufts University School of Medicine. For 7 years under a grant, Richard was the academic coach at Boston College for students with ADHD. He began and coordinated services at MIT for students with learning and attention disorders for 6 years in the mid 1990's. Prior to that, Richard coordinated LD Support Services at Boston University. Richard holds a masters degree in education from the Harvard Graduate School of Education and is a SIM professional developer at Kansas University's Center for Research on Learning. He is trained as a Wilson dyslexia practitioner, instructor of writing and in training as an ADHD/Life Coach through ADD Coach Academy and the International Coaching Federation. He is the author of several publications on students in postsecondary education and a book on homework for middle school students through Scholastic Press.